

Erik Peterson, AIA

Integrus, a collaboration of YGH & Integrus Architecture

Erik is a thoughtful and collaborative architect who enjoys helping schools bring their visions to life. With over ten years of experience—from single and multi-family with a current focus K-12 design—he collaborates with educators and communities to create spaces that are simple, functional, and inspiring. He believes effective design starts with listening and is passionate about translating ideas into buildings that support discovery, connection, and wonder. Since joining Integrus Architecture in 2020, Erik has led Middle and High school projects from schematic design through construction, using his deep understanding of structure and design to guide teams and clients toward calm and engaging spaces. Erik holds a Master of Architecture from Virginia Tech and a bachelor's degree in engineering from Tufts University. Outside the office, you will find him cooking, woodworking, or exploring the outdoors in the Pacific Northwest.
